Do you care about the future of the psychotherapy and counselling profession?

In the twentieth century new theories proliferated. In the twenty-first century its values are being challenged by standardisation and manual ways of thinking. Will therapy as we know it cease to exist in years to come? Is it already dying? A new book entitled The future of psychological therapy: from managed care to transformational practice addresses these issues. The book examines the dangers posed to the profession. Can we respond creatively to them?

The conference and book propose a creative and vigorous response. They counterbalance managed care with the transformational research and practice which our profession has developed continuously since its inception. They look at this issue from the points of view of context, IAPT and practice.
